Looking for a fulfilling, fun, growth-focused activity that can be sustained regularly despite the pandemic? I'm offering online flute/piccolo lessons for students of all ages and levels. My entire studio (ages 4 to 70-something, including college and grad students) transitioned to online lessons in March, and both my current and newer students have continued to thrive.

About lessons:

My teaching style is strongly influenced by the Suzuki philosophy. I focus on nurturing a positive growth mindset and analytical problem solving skills as I help students build not only musical mastery, but also confidence as learners. I work with students to develop a variety of skills, including sight-reading, rhythm, ear training, beautiful tone, musicianship, and the social skills involved in being part of a supportive peer community. I organize regular performance events (including a Zoom recital last spring) and monthly group lessons during the school year.

Having private lessons with an expert on their instrument enables students to develop their musical skills and mastery in a much deeper way than through band participation alone (where the main focus is on building ensemble playing skills), and it helps them to have a more fulfilling experience in ensembles.

COVID: Because of the aerosol production (tiny particles which stay airborne for an extended time and travel farther than 6 feet) and fast-moving air involved in flute playing, I am currently only offering online lessons to protect the safety of my students, their families, and my family.

About me:

I hold undergraduate and graduate degrees in flute performance and have extensive experience as a performer in ensembles such as the Minnesota Opera Orchestra, Minnesota Orchestra, South Dakota Symphony, and Chione Quintet. I have pursued a variety of pedagogy training to build a broad repertoire of teaching techniques, and I have experience working with students who have special needs.
